Chicken Marsala Pasta

I first had this dish at a restaurant in Portland and spent the entire drive home trying to remember what I had ordered. It took me three tries to get the sauce right, but the result is worth every failed attempt. The key is to let the mushrooms brown undisturbed before you stir them, which is harder than it sounds when you are hungry and impatient.

For the pasta, I prefer fettuccine because the wide surface holds the sauce well, but any long noodle will work. Cook the pasta in salted water until it is just shy of al dente, then finish cooking it in the sauce so it absorbs the flavor. Reserve a cup of the pasta water before draining; the starch in it helps the sauce cling to the noodles and gives it a silky texture.

Serves four. Prep time: 15 minutes. Cook time: 30 minutes.

Lemon Bars

These bars have a shortbread crust and a tart lemon filling that sets up beautifully in the refrigerator overnight. They are perfect for bake sales because they travel well and do not require plates or forks. Cut them into small squares and they will disappear quickly.

Use fresh lemon juice, not bottled, and zest the lemons before you juice them. The zest contains the oils that give the bars their bright aroma, and you will lose most of it if you try to zest a lemon that has already been squeezed. Dust the finished bars with powdered sugar through a fine sieve for a clean, even coating.
